Six Face Charges Over 9/11

U.S. seeks death penalty for detainees linked to attacks

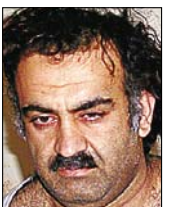

WASHINGTON | The Pentagon on Monday charged six Guantanamo Bay detainees with murder and war crimes for the Sept. 11 terror attacks. Officials sought the death penalty in the unprecedented military tribunal case that has been clouded by revelations the key suspect suffered interrogation tactics that critics call torture.

Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Hartmann, the legal adviser to the tribunal system, announced that 169 charges had been sworn against six men "alleged to be responsible for the planning and execution of the attacks" in 2001 that killed nearly 3,000 people.

Officials said they'll seek the death penalty and hope to try all six together. That would make it the first capital trial under the terrorism-era military tribunal system.

Hartmann said the six include Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, the suspected mastermind of the attacks.

The other five men are: Mohammed al-Qahtani, who officials have labeled the 20th hijacker; Ramzi Binalshibh, said to have been the main intermediary between the hijackers and al-Qaeda leaders; Ali Abd al-Aziz Ali, a nephew and lieutenant of Khalid Sheikh Mohammed; al-Baluchi's assistant, Mustafa Ahmad al-Hawsawi; and Waleed bin Attash, a detainee known as Khallad, who, investigators say, selected and trained some of the 19 hijackers. U.S. Charges Four With Espionage

Pentagon employee is accused of selling classified information

WASHINGTON | A Defense Department analyst and a former engineer for Boeing Co. were charged Monday in separate spy cases for allegedly handing over military secrets to the Chinese government, the Justice Department said.

Additionally, two immigrants from China and Taiwan accused of working with the defense analyst were arrested after an FBI raid Monday morning on a New Orleans home where one of them lived.

The two cases — based in Alexandria, Va., and Los Angeles — have no connection, and investigators said it was merely a coincidence that charges would be brought against both on the same day.

The arrests mark China's latest attempts to gain top secret information about U.S. military systems and sales, said Assistant Attorney General Kenneth Wainstein. He described China as "particularly adept, and particularly determined and methodical in their espionage efforts."

An official at the Chinese Embassy did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

In the first case, prosecutors said weapons systems policy analyst Gregg W. Bergersen, 51, of Alexandria, Va., sold classified defense information to a New Orleans furniture salesman. In return, the salesman, a Taiwan native identified as Tai Kuo, a 58-year-old naturalized U.S. citizen, forwarded the information to the Chinese government.

It's not clear how much money Bergersen received for the classified information, or if he was even aware it was intended for the Chinese government.

In the second, unrelated case, former Boeing engineer Dongfan "Greg" Chung, 72, was arrested on charges of working as an unregistered agent for the Chinese government who stole trade secrets from the defense contractor. (AP)

Hispanic Population May Triple in U.S.

Report: Nearly 1 in 5 Americans could be foreign-born by 2050

WASHINGTON | The number of Hispanics in the United States will triple by the year 2050 and represent nearly 30 percent of the population if current trends continue, according to a report released Monday.

WAVE OF IMMIGRATION

→ The Pew study projects that, by 2025, the foreign-born share of the population will surpass the peak during the last great wave of immigration between 1860 and 1920, when foreign-born residents made up as much as 15 percent of the U.S. population.

The study by the nonpartisan, Washington-based Pew Research Center, also found that nearly one in five Americans will be foreign-born in 2050, compared with about one in eight today. Asian Americans, representing 4 percent of the population today, are expected to boost their share to 9 percent.

Blacks are projected to maintain their current 13 percent share.

Non-Hispanic whites will still be the nation's largest group. But they will drop from 67 percent of U.S. residents to 47 percent.

Overall, the U.S. population will increase by 47 percent from 296 million in 2005 to 438 million by 2050.

Authors of the study, which roughly tracks similar analyses by the Census Bureau and other sources, cautioned that their findings are projections that may change.

Huckabee Fights Against the Odds

Candidate is refusing to drop out of the race despite McCain's lead

WASHINGTON | Against overwhelming odds, Mike Huckabee keeps brushing off calls to drop his presidential bid for the good of the Republican Party.

The former Arkansas governor and ordained Baptist minister is following in the footsteps of past spoilers such as Republican Ronald Reagan in 1976 and Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy in 1980, who both pressed uphill primary challenges to the limits.

Some GOP sages suggest it's hard to quit while you're still winning races, as Huckabee is doing, despite the mathematical reality of the delegate count. But then Republican presidential hopeful Mike Huckabee is running a long-shot campaign against Sen. John McCain of Arizona, who is considered the GOP front-runner.

“I still could win. ... Nobody thought the Giants were going to win the Super Bowl.”

MIKE HUCKABEE

Huckabee likes to brag that he “didn’t major in math; I majored in miracles,” and he asserted anew on Monday his intention to stay in the race.

Some Republicans suggest Huckabee’s insistence on staying in the race could hinder the party’s ability to unify behind the front-runner.

For his part, Huckabee was unbowed on the eve of contests in Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia, saying “I still could win. ... Nobody thought the Giants were going to win the Super Bowl, either.” Huckabee also picked up the endorsement of one-time rival Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif.

Huckabee says he’ll drop out if he’s mathematically eliminated — in other words, once McCain racks up the needed 1,191 delegates.

When asked whether Huckabee risks overplaying his hand, his campaign chairman, Ed Rollins, said he didn’t think so.

“I think he’s made it very clear that until either he or McCain have 1,191 delegates, he’s going to stay in this thing. We always wanted to get it down to one-on-one,” Rollins said Monday.

Huckabee and McCain “respect each other. They’re both men of integrity,” Rollins said. “Tomorrow is a big day. We’ll keep going as long as we can.” TOM RAUM (AP)

The Edwards Courtship

The John Edwards primary is now in full swing. Hillary Clinton made a clandestine visit to see her former rival last Thursday at his home in North Carolina to seek his support. Soon, it will be Barack Obama's turn to make the pilgrimage to Tobacco Road. The Illinois senator ought to be ready for some serious conversation.

That Edwards is agonizing over the endorsement should be worrisome to Obama. Edwards, the scourge of special interests, should be easy pickings for the change candidate in the Democratic race, given all Edwards has said in criticism about Clinton while campaigning. But outward appearances suggest he is genuinely torn. An endorsement of Clinton would be a blow to Obama.

Whether Edwards will soon endorse is not clear. But if he does, the decision is likely to generate as much media attention as Ted Kennedy's endorsement of Obama. DAN BALZ

Clinton Confident of Her Chances

Senator says she never expected to win states that went to Obama

WHITE MARSH, MD. | Democratic Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton denied Monday that her campaign is in trouble after losing to Sen. Barack Obama in four states last weekend and replacing her campaign manager.

"I'm still ahead in the popular vote and in delegates," Clinton said, though the numbers do not fully support that statement.

An Associated Press tally shows Clinton with a slim lead among delegates — 1,147, compared to 1,124 for Obama. But an initial tabulation of the total popular vote showed Obama likely to pull ahead once the results of states that held caucuses are fully counted.

Speaking to reporters outside

CAROLYN KASTER/AP

Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., says she is confident that her campaign will do well in upcoming contests in Texas and Ohio.

Baltimore, Clinton said she feels very good about the state of the race, even though she is not expected to win between now and March 4, when voters in Texas and Ohio cast ballots.

"We had a great night on Super Tuesday," Clinton said, referring to the 22 states that voted Feb. 5.

"I believe if you look at the states ... upcoming, I am very confident."

The former first lady said the decision by Patti Solis Doyle to step down as campaign manager was personal and reflected the toll of the long campaign, not a problem with her job performance.

Solis Doyle's departure capped a rough weekend for Clinton after she lost the Louisiana primary and caucuses in Nebraska, Washington state, Maine and the Virgin Islands to Obama.

Clinton said she never expected to do well in any of those contests, even though she had been favored to win Maine. She repeated her criticism that the caucus system is undemocratic and caters mostly to party activists. BETH FOUHY (AP)

Health Troubles Not an Age Barrier

Survey: Many people who live to age 100 have chronic ailments

CHICAGO | Living to 100 is easier than you might think.

Surprising new research suggests that even people who develop heart disease or diabetes late in life have a decent shot at reaching the century mark.

TREATMENT NEED

→ Dr. William Hall noted that the United States has more than 55,000 centenarians and that Americans 85 and older are the country's fastest-growing group of older adults. He said the new research shows how important it is for doctors to become adept at treating them.

"It has been generally assumed that living to 100 years of age was limited to those who had not developed chronic illness," said Dr. William Hall of the University of Rochester.

Hall has a theory for how these people could live to that age. In an editorial in Monday's Archives of Internal Medicine, where the study was published, he writes that it might be due to doctors who aggressively treat these older folks' health problems.

For the study, Boston University researchers conducted phone interviews and health assessments of more than 500 women and 200 men who had reached 100. They found that roughly two-thirds of them had avoided age-related ailments.

But the rest, dubbed "survivors," had developed an age-related disease before reaching 85. Yet many functioned remarkably well — nearly as well as their disease-free peers.

Gates Backs Pause in Troop Cuts

Defense secretary says evaluation is needed on drawdown in Iraq

FORWARD OPERATING BASE FALCON, IRAQ | In a clear sign the drawdown of U.S. forces from Iraq will be suspended, Defense Secretary Robert Gates said Monday he favors taking time this summer to assess security gains before more troops leave the country, an idea President Bush is expected to support.

It was Gates' first public endorsement of a possible suspension, and it would seem to mark an end to the Pentagon chief's previously stated hope that conditions in Iraq would permit American troops to withdraw in the second half of this year as rapidly as they are leaving now.

"A brief period of consolidation and evaluation probably does make sense," Gates told reporters. He had just finished private meetings with Gen. David Petraeus, the top U.S. commander in Iraq, and the No. 2 commander, Lt. Gen. Ray Odierno.

Petraeus and Odierno both have said publicly in recent weeks that they would like to see a "period of assessment" after July in order to get a clearer indication of how troop cuts by then are working.

The logic of a pause, perhaps through September and possibly longer, rests on the fact that the current schedule for troop reductions through July leaves open the possibility that as the Americans leave in increasingly big numbers, security gains — described by Gates Monday as "fragile" — may be eroded or lost. Leaders of Hamas Go Into Hiding

Israeli defense minister tells military to ready for invasion of Gaza

GAZA CITY, GAZA STRIP | Leaders of Gaza's ruling Hamas movement have gone into hiding, fearing Israeli assassination attempts in response to a wave of Palestinian rocket attacks on southern Israel, officials said Monday.

Israeli Defense Minister Ehud Barak ordered the military to prepare to invade Gaza, and told Israeli lawmakers that under certain circumstances, Israel would "even take down Hamas."

Barak spoke at a closed parliamentary meeting whose discussions routinely are leaked to the media. It was the first time a senior Israeli official hinted so strongly that Israel was prepared to overthrow Hamas if the Palestinians didn't do it themselves.

Israel, which is negotiating a peace deal with moderate Palestinians based in the West Bank, has made it clear it has no intention of implementing any accord until Hamas is removed from power in Gaza.

Pakistanis Nab Taliban Commander

ISLAMABAD, PAKISTAN | Pakistani forces captured and critically wounded a senior Taliban militant on Monday, the second successful targeting in two weeks of a terror suspect as the government faced growing Western pressure to crack down on cross-border attacks into Afghanistan.

But in a reminder of the growing militant threat destabilizing Pakistan, a suicide bomb wounded a candidate and killed seven others as he campaigned for next week's parliamentary elections. Also, Pakistan's ambassador to Afghanistan was missing and feared kidnapped as he traveled in a volatile Pakistani tribal region.

The arrest of Mansoor Dadullah, brother of slain Taliban military commander Mullah Dadullah, was a boost for the U.S.-backed campaign against the Taliban and al-Qaeda, though it also demonstrated that militant chiefs operate inside Pakistan despite its deployment of 100,000 troops along the border. 4 Art Masterpieces Stolen

Gunmen grab $163M in paintings during brazen museum theft

ZURICH, SWITZERLAND | Three gunmen in ski masks and dark clothes burst into a museum just before closing time. After a quick run through the building, they hustled out the door and sped off with paintings by Cezanne, Degas, van Gogh and Monet valued at $163.2 million.

Authorities appealed Monday for any witnesses to help reconstruct the robbers' getaway from the E.G. Buehrle Collection, a private museum of Impressionist works whose founder had his own troubled history with stolen art.

The three robbers entered the museum a half-hour before its scheduled close Sunday. While one trained a pistol on museum personnel ordered to lie on the floor, the two others collected four paintings from the exhibition hall, police said.

Degas' "Ludovic Lepic and His Daughter" was stolen from a Zurich museum Monday.

The men, one of whom spoke German with a Slavic accent, loaded the paintings into a white vehicle parked out front. Police said the paintings may have been sticking out of the trunk as the robbers made their getaway.

A reward of $90,000 was offered for information leading to the recovery of the paintings: Claude Monet's "Poppy field at Vetheuil," Edgar Degas' "Ludovic Lepic and His Daughter," Vincent van Gogh's "Blooming Chestnut Branches" and Paul Cezanne's "Boy in the Red Waistcoat." ERNST E. ABEGG (AP)

Kenyans Try to Strike Deal

President is willing to consider sharing power with opposition

NAIROBI, KENYA | Kenya's president would consider sharing power with the opposition as part of a deal to end weeks of post-election bloodshed, a negotiator for his party said Monday in the first acknowledgment from the government that such a proposal was on the table.

Word of the possible power-sharing deal came as a top U.N. official said that up to 600,000 Kenyans have been forced from their homes since a dispute over who won the Dec. 27 presidential election set off weeks of ethnic strife in this once prosperous East Africa country.

The violence has also killed more than 1,000 people, and the international community has been pressing Kenya's rival parties to strike a power-sharing deal in talks mediated by former U.N. chief Kofi Annan.

The talks have already led to a deal to try to end the violence, but finding a political solution acceptable to all sides is much tougher.

An opposition negotiator said Friday that a power-sharing deal had been struck. But Annan later called the announcement premature, although he said the two sides had made significant progress toward reaching an agreement.

ress toward reaching an agreement.

Annan's statement was reason for hope for many Kenyans, who have seen their country tear itself apart in recent weeks with much of the violence pitting ethnic groups against one another.

Matchmakers debate running background checks on every user

NEW YORK | As Valentine's Day approaches, all is not lovey-dovey in the high-stakes online dating industry.

The contentious issue of the moment — pitting one of the three biggest companies, True.com, against its major rivals — is whether online dating services can enhance their clients' safety by conducting criminal background screenings of would-be daters.

Last month, New Jersey became the first state to enact a law requiring the sites to disclose whether they perform background checks. True.com — the only large online dating service that already does such screenings — was elated by its successful lobbying and hopes other states will follow suit.

"The online dating industry tends to get a real bad rap because of criminal activity," said True.com's founder and chief executive, Herb Vest. "If we were to clean up, there's hordes of off-line singles who'd come online to find their soul mate."

However, Vest's many critics say he is acting mostly out of self-interest. They contend that True.com's screening method — running names

True.com CEO Herb Vest is a proponent of performing criminal background checks on online daters. He says safety concerns keep people away from the sites.

“The online dating industry tends to get a real bad rap because of criminal activity.”

through state databases of criminal records — is incomplete and too easily thwarted.

"It's so superficial that it's worthless," said Braden Cox, policy counsel with NetChoice, a coalition of e-commerce companies that includes Yahoo, AOL and other major players in online dating.

Some worry that New Jersey's action will push other states to regulate the online dating industry, creating a hodgepodge of laws that will drive up operating costs.

Huge sums are at stake. Projections by Jupiter Research, an Internet consultancy, suggest the online dating market now totals $700 million or more. DAVID CRARY (AP)

Democratic contenders make final push before Tuesday's primaries

ANNAPOLIS, MD. | A day before the first Potomac Primary, presidential candidates gave Maryland unusual attention Monday, and a state elections official said she hoped the unprecedented contest would drive voter turnout higher than in past Maryland primaries.

Meanwhile, political observers pointed to evidence of strong support in Maryland for Illinois Sen. Barack Obama in the Democratic race with New York Sen. Hillary Clinton.

POTOMAC PRIMARY

With presidential primaries held Tuesday, the Democratic candidates hit the local campaign trail.

→ Sen. Hillary Clinton said in a speech Monday at the National Council of Negro Women in D.C. that the District is "long overdue" for full congressional voting rights.

→ Sen. Barack Obama spoke on WRVA radio in Richmond Monday and said Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine was "on my short list to have a role in my administration."

professor at the University of Maryland, Baltimore County, predicted an Obama victory, saying the state's large black populations in the city of Baltimore and Prince George's County help make Maryland a state for him to excel with voters. "It would be a catastrophic failure for him if he lost," Schaller said.

Obama held a rally Monday at the University of Maryland, College Park, where he continued to tell voters he was the person to change the country for the better.

Clinton, who toured a General Motors plant outside of Baltimore, said she remained confident. "If you look at the states ... upcoming, I am very confident."

Maryland has a total of 99 delegates to the Democratic national convention, and 70 of them will be decided in the state's primary.

D.C. Mom Will Remain Held in Deaths of 4 Girls

WASHINGTON | A D.C. judge says a case can proceed against a woman found in her home with the decomposing bodies of her four daughters.

Superior Court Judge Frederick Weisberg on Monday found probable cause to order 33-year-old Banita Jacks to remain held on murder charges while a grand jury investigates.

The bodies of the girls, ages 5 to 16, were found Jan. 9 when U.S. marshals served an eviction notice at the family's apartment in southeast Washington. The medical examiner's office has said there is evidence that the oldest girl had been stabbed and that the other three girls had markings on their necks and other signs of trauma.

A follow-up hearing is scheduled for April 4. (AP)

'08 PRIMARY PRIMER

The District

→ Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Those registered in the Democratic, Republican and D.C. Statehood Green parties may vote in their party's primary.

→ The District will send 3.8 delegates to the Democratic National Convention in August in Denver. Of those, five will vote proportionately with the outcome in Wards 1-5, five with the results in Wards 5-8 and five with the citywide outcome. The rest will be superdelegates the party picks.

→ On the GOP side, the District will send 19 delegates to the national convention in September in Minneapolis. The winner will take all delegates. There are three superdelegates who can vote for anyone.

Maryland

→ The polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Those registered in the Democratic and Republican parties can vote in their party's primary.

→ Maryland will send 99 delegates to the Democratic National Convention. Of those, 29 will be superdelegates who can vote for whomever they want. The rest will vote based on the outcome Tuesday; 46 vote proportionately, based on the outcome in their congressional districts, and 24 vote based on the state proportion of votes.

→ On the GOP side, 37 delegates will go to the convention. Of those, 13 are pledged to whoever wins the state, and 24 will vote with the candidate who wins his or her congressional district Tuesday.

Virginia

→ Polls will be open from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. Virginians do not register by party and can vote in either the Democratic or Republican primary.

→ Virginia will send 103 delegates to the Democratic National Convention. The party will apportion the delegates according to the percentage of votes they receive Tuesday.

→ The state will send 63 delegates to the GOP convention. Tuesday's winner will get all of them.

REDSKINS | BY MATT SWENSON

Zorn Could Be Great — or Not

TO BE HONEST, I don't know a whole lot about Jim Zorn, but here are two observations related to his hiring: Matt Hasselbeck did not leave Boston College as a Pro Bowl-caliber quarterback, and the West Coast offense has never been run effectively in Washington.

To start on a positive note, Hasselbeck's progress in Seattle should give Redskins fans hope that Jason Campbell's future is in the right hands. Of course, no one here really knows how much credit goes to Zorn or to Seahawks coach Mike Holmgren, who has coached Hasselbeck and Brett Favre — before he was a legend — to the Super Bowl.

We've seen firsthand just how long it can take to change offensive schemes.

The short-passing attack known as the West Coast offense, however, failed to be installed successfully by Richie Petitbon and Rod Dowhower the year after Joe Gibbs retired the first time.

That disaster doesn't mean Zorn won't do a fine job in Washington. However, we've seen firsthand just how long it can take to change offensive schemes. Steve Spurrier's fun 'n' gun was full of blanks for two years. Even more recently, look at the setback suffered when Al Saunders took over the offense from Gibbs.

If similar results occur, Zorn will be replaced as fast as you can say Bill Cowher.

Truth be told, no one knows how Zorn will do. That's why his hiring could be looked back upon as genius or just another misstep by an owner who hasn't gotten it right yet.

So, Zorn's the Coach ... Now What?

Redskins have a lot of offseason questions on both sides of the ball

REDSKINS | Redskins owner Dan Snyder said he wanted to be thorough in his search for a new head coach. More than a month later, it's safe to say he's done that.

But Snyder has been so thorough that his choice, Jim Zorn, will have to work around the clock in order to be equally prepared to make offseason decisions. The scouting combine starts Feb. 21, free agency starts one week later and the NFL draft is April 26. With that in mind, we take a quick look at the three biggest questions facing Zorn and the Redskins this offseason.

Wide receiver

Rumors about a possible trade for Bengals star Chad Johnson have been circulating around the beltway for weeks, and, even if that never happens, it is possible the Redskins will look elsewhere for another big-play receiver. Antwaan Randle-El — who Zorn praised highly on Sunday — will be back as a slot receiver, but the drop in Santana Moss' production may tempt the Redskins to make the former Pro Bowler a secondary threat. Two older receivers who played a role in the Red-

Jason Campbell will be the Redskins' starting quarterback next season, new coach Jim Zorn said. But who will back him up?

skins' winning streak at the end of the year — Reche Caldwell and Keenan McCardell — will be free agents in March. And then there's the Brandon Lloyd fiasco. He's still under contract. Will a new coach give him a new shot?

Quarterback

Zorn was very clear on Sunday: Jason Campbell is the team's starting quarterback. How the fourth-year QB progresses under the renowned quarterbacks coach will be the No. 1 storyline during the offseason and into the regular season as well. The Redskins will also have to decide whether they want to keep Todd Collins as a backup when he will probably be offered decent money and perhaps a starting job elsewhere. Mark Brunell, who learned the West Coast offense in Green Bay, is still on the roster. Will Zorn be happy with the aging lefty as Washington's backup?

Defense

The defense is Greg Blache's, and Zorn said he trusted Blache to make decisions regarding that unit. But the first-year defensive coordinator inherits an aging roster that has high expectations after playing very well last year under Gregg Williams. Youngsters Anthony Montgomery and Kedric Golston stepped in and performed admirably last season, but DE Phillip Daniels will be 35 in March, and Shawn Springs will be 33. CB Carlos Rogers and LB Rocky McIntosh will both be coming back from serious injury — if they can make it back at all — and the team will have to sit down and seriously discuss how to fill the hole vacated by Sean Taylor's death.

IAN HERBERT (EXPRESS)

A closer look: The Redskins are $16 million over the cap but will likely make some offseason moves. For a position-by-position breakdown, see | Today's Post, Sports

Shaq Practices With His New Squad

O'Neal is a bit winded after short, up-tempo workout with the Suns

NBA | Shaquille O'Neal practiced with the Suns for the first time Monday, showing no sign of the hip injury that had sidelined him since Jan. 21, but feeling a bit winded afterward.

"It was different. It was very intense," he said after the one-hour workout. "I learned a lot. Now I can see why they can go at the pace they play at. When you just do short bursts like this, then you can save it all for the game."

Just when he will play in a game remained undecided.

"I haven't done anything in a month, but I'm in pretty good shape," O'Neal said. "It will probably take me a few more days to get in tune. The good thing about these guys here is they told me when I'm comfortable, when I'm one-thousand percent, then I can join them."

Phoenix has two games before the All-Star break — at Golden State on Wednesday night and at home against Dallas on Thursday. The first game after the break is at home against Shaq's old team, the Los Angeles Lakers.

"I think it's going to take a little bit," coach Mike D'Antoni said. "It's going to be an adjustment for our guys and for him. ... But it's going to be good chemistry and it's going to change things up, hopefully, for the better."

The Suns have the conference's best record at 36-15 but only 5½ games separate the top nine teams in the West. BOB BAUM (AP)

O's Choose Quantity Over Quality

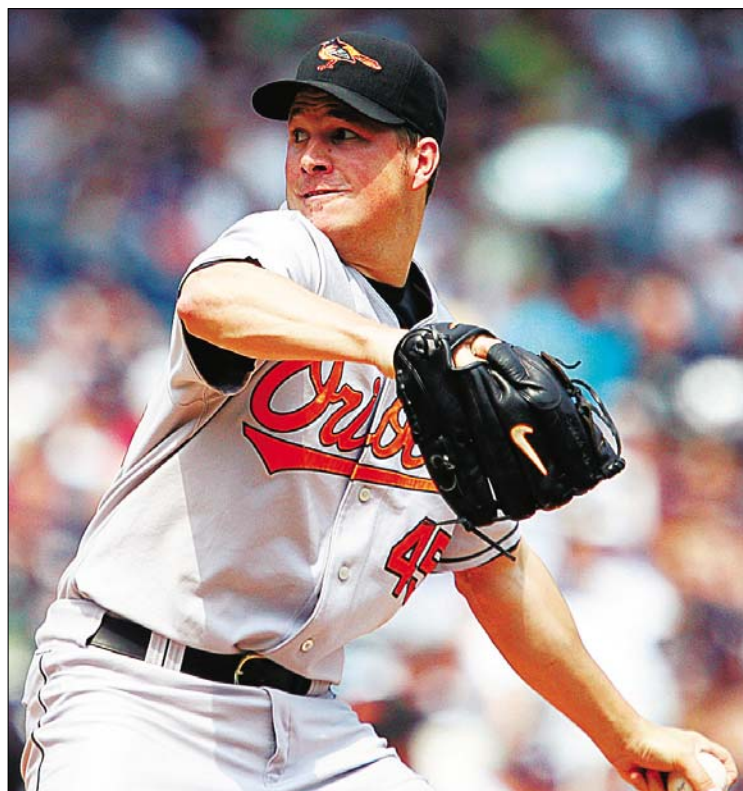

Rebuilding Baltimore makes two 5-for-1 trades this offseason

ORIOLES | The Baltimore Orioles had just completed another dreadful season when club president Andy MacPhail announced at the organizational meeting in October that no longer would the team seek to sign midlevel free agents in an effort to compete with New York and Boston in the AL East.

"He told us it was time to rebuild with youth, and that we might end up trading some of our better players," manager Dave Trembley said. "But he said we would have to get quantity in return."

MacPhail, appointed to the position last June after successful runs with the Chicago Cubs and Minnesota Twins, determined that a complete overhaul was required to fix a franchise that has suffered through 10 straight losing seasons. If that meant adding another sub-.500 season (or two) to the ledger, then so be it.

And so, in December he traded former AL MVP Miguel Tejada to Mariners.

NEW DEPTHS

thought we needed to do, and we're always going to continue to evaluate circumstances as they come up," MacPhail said. "We are serious about wanting to win. Sometimes you have to pay the price for that. You have to be willing to make a short-term sacrifice. Being stuck in neutral and staying where we were, that, to me, was very untenable, very unattractive."

There is no way of knowing whether any of the 10 new players will turn out to be exceptional, or even decent. But the course has been set. The Orioles are in full rebuilding mode, and there's no turning back now.

They still don't know who their starting pitcher will be on opening day, or who will bat cleanup or play shortstop or serve as the closer. But they do have 10 guys who might make a difference in the future.

"They're prospects. There is no guarantee. That's why bulk is important. That's why numbers are important," MacPhail said. "We've got two gone and 10 in the fold."

Seven of them pitchers.

"We tried to attack the pitching with numbers," MacPhail said. "We know by definition that if you got seven, you might end up at the end of the day with three or four. That's just the way the game works."

O's Add Trachsel To Help Bolster Young Rotation

ORIOLES | Steve Trachsel agreed to a minor league contract with the Orioles, who turned to a familiar face to add much-needed experience to their starting rotation.

Trachsel began last season with the Orioles and went 6-8 with a 4.48 ERA before he was traded to the Cubs on Aug. 31. The righty joins a youthful starting rotation for manager Dave Trembley that includes Jeremy Guthrie, Adam Loewen, Daniel Cabrera and Brian Burres.

"Steve was definitely the choice of Dave Trembley and our major league scouts," president of baseball operations Andy MacPhail said. "They thought his professionalism and work ethic would be a good example for the young pitchers in the clubhouse." (AP)

Less Hype but Higher Expectations

The Matsuzaka media frenzy ends as 2nd year with Red Sox starts

BASEBALL | The media frenzy is finished. The interest in the gyroball is missing. The curiosity about the brilliant Japanese pitcher is gone.

Daisuke Matsuzaka is no longer a major league rookie. This spring training is already much calmer than his first one with the Red Sox.

"I know where everything is," the $103 million pitcher said through a translator. "I know the layout of the facilities and things like that, so it's been a lot easier being back this year."

Only about 20 reporters spoke with Matsuzaka after his second day at camp Monday. Last year, at his first official news conference of spring training, there were about 100 media members plus nine satellite trucks.

Last year, Daisuke Matsuzaka was bombarded by reporters throughout spring training.

That event was televised live to Japan, where it was 7 a.m. — must-see TV after Boston paid $51.1 million for the right to negotiate with him and another $52 million for his six-year contract.

Most of that pressure has disappeared. The burden of making up for the absence of Curt Schilling has been added.

Dice-K had a solid shot at moving up to the No. 2 slot in the rotation, behind Josh Beckett, even before it was disclosed last week that rehabilitation of a shoulder injury would sideline Schilling at least until the All-Star break.

Matsuzaka will be in that spot at the first official workout for pitchers and catchers Saturday, two days after they're scheduled to report. Four-fifths of the projected rotation — Beckett, Matsuzaka, Jon Lester and Clay Buchholz — already are in camp. Only Tim Wakefield didn't work out there Monday.

"Compared to last year," Matsuzaka said, "things are going to be a lot more comfortable, a lot more familiar. So, in that sense, there's going to be a lot less stress. So, hopefully, I can take some of that energy and really focus it on baseball."

"As for high expectations, I think I'm the one that has the highest expectations for myself." HOWARD ULMAN (AP)

Richard Zednik, center, lost five units of blood after a skate cut his carotid artery.

Zednik Responsive Following Surgery

Doctors say luck aided hockey star after skate
cut the carotid artery

NHL | Florida Panthers forward Richard Zednik lost five units of blood, but doctors never considered his life in jeopardy after the player had his carotid artery nearly severed by a teammate's skate in a freak and frightening accident.

Zednik underwent an hour of surgery to reconnect the artery Sunday night and was listed in stable condition in the intensive care unit at Buffalo General Hospital on Monday. He was awake and cooperative with the medical staff, doctors said.

Attending surgeon Sonya Noor said there were no initial signs of brain damage, which is a fear whenever the carotid artery is clamped. She said clamps were in place for about 15 to 20 minutes during surgery, which she considers a short time.

"So far, he looks very good. He's awake, oriented," said Noor. "He remembers what happened."

Zednik was sliced across the right side of the throat by teammate Olli Jokinen's skate midway through the third period of Buffalo's 5-3 victory. Doctors said the skate blade just missed cutting the jugular vein.

According to Noor, the slashed artery was "hanging by a thread." She stressed if the artery had been completely severed it would have recessed into the neck, requiring even more extensive surgery.

Vascular surgeon Richard Curl, who assisted Noor, said the cut was about an inch and a half deep and also as wide. Doctors were astonished the skate blade did not hit any other arteries or veins or cause any further damage.

"Luck," was a factor, according to Noor. JOHN WAWROW (AP)

A Final NFL Push at 32

Former Michigan State hoops star gets his tryout this spring

FOOTBALL | Michigan State's weight room was filled with football players pushing themselves to the point of exhaustion.

Then, there was Antonio Smith. The 6-foot-8, 260-pounder looked like the rest of the green-clad athletes.

But he's not.

More than a decade ago, Smith was the building block upon which Tom Izzo built one of the nation's best basketball teams. Smith helped the team reach the first of four Final Fours under the coach in 1999.

After playing professional basketball in Michigan and Italy, Smith — the brother of a current NFL player, Robaire, and a retired one, Fernando — finally is doing what Izzo and Nick Saban wanted him to do a long time ago.

Smith is trying to make football a career despite not playing the sport since the eighth grade. He turns 32 a week before the NFL draft in April.

"Doing this has always been in the back of my mind, but I was focusing on basketball," Smith told The Associated Press.

He has been catching passes, running routes, blocking sleds, lifting weights and going through drills in preparation for Michigan State's pro day March 12. That's when more than 20 NFL scouts will evaluate him alongside traditional prospects such as receiver Devin Thomas.

Gil Brandt, the NFL's scouting consultant and longtime personnel director of the Dallas Cowboys, said a team might invite Smith for a nothing-to-lose workout after the draft.

"If he makes it, it would be a heck of a story because it would be like the eighth wonder of the world," Brandt said Monday. "Outside of the guy they made a movie out of with the Philadelphia Eagles [Vince Papale], I can't think of anybody that has done what he's trying to do." LARRY LAGE (AP)

Quiet Daytona Week Is a Good Thing

Last year, 6 people were kicked out of the opener due to cheating

DAYTONA 500 | Two-time series champion Jimmie Johnson took a trip to the Florida Keys. Crew chief Tony Eury Jr. visited Sea World. And some of NASCAR's top officials played golf.

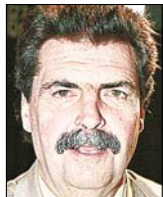

All was quiet — for a change — at Daytona International Speedway on Monday, just the way NASCAR wanted it.

Cheating scandals rocked the Daytona 500 the previous two years, tarnishing NASCAR's most prestigious event and turning the attention to the uglier side of racing. It made for a busy Monday and Tuesday at Daytona, which is traditionally closed to crews on those two days of Speedweeks.

Five teams were popped last season and six people were kicked out of the season opener, nearly turning NASCAR into a national laughingstock in the days leading up to the Super Bowl of racing.

NASCAR opened this year hoping to get back to the basics. After several changes, large and small, to its top series, chairman Brian France wants to make 2008 be about the action on the track and the characters who comprise the most popular form of racing in the United States.

The attention had shifted away from that in recent years, with sagging television ratings and a decline in attendance as fans grew bored with the racing and bland drivers afraid to show any emotion.

"We want the drivers to be themselves," president Mike Helton said. "Our sport has done very well on [its] character ... and the character of the sport is built by all the drivers that participate, as well as owners, the other penalties." JENNA FRYER (AP)

A Brazilian 'Vacation'

Cao Hamburger tells a story of tyranny and a yearlong trip

FLIGHT | Folded into a small hotel chair, a scarf wrapped stylishly around his neck, Cao Hamburger is the picture of quiet intensity. It's a wintry afternoon in New York City, and the writer-director, a tall, dark-haired Brazilian, is here to talk about his film, "The Year My Parents Went on Vacation." Brazil's official selection for the Academy Award for best foreign-language film, the feature is about a boy whose parents are forced into exile. "My parents went on vacation," Hamburger says, "but they came back."

The filmmaker was nine years old in 1970 when his mother and father placed him in the care of relatives to flee Brazil's dictatorship. "At first, they were arrested," Hamburger explains. "They were not activists or communists. They were intellectuals, professors, and they helped people who were in trouble; they helped some of the dissidents."

The film's young protagonist, Mauro (Michel Joelsas), is 12 when he is taken to his grandfather's apartment in Sao Paulo. His parents tell him if anyone asks where they are, he is to say that they are on vacation. The story is only partly autobiographical; it is based on the collective experiences of Hamburger and members of his crew. "It was something that none of us ever forgot," Hamburger says.

"The Year My Parents Went on Vacation" eschews political discourse and remains squarely focused on the viewpoint of its shaggy, wide-eyed hero. Mauro's story begins when his parents drop him in front of his grandfather's building. Mauro's misery is further compounded when he learns that his grandfather died shortly before he arrived. Schlomo (Germano Haiut), an elderly neighbor, and a member of his grandfather's synagogue, lets the boy into the apartment. After the grandfather's funeral, on orders from the rabbi, Mauro is put into Schlomo's care, although neither the man nor the child is content with the arrangement. Mauro does not speak Yiddish, and he knows nothing about being Jewish.

In an effort to intensify the audience's identification with Mauro's predicament early on, Hamburger decided to forego subtitled the Yiddish dialogue. "You understand only what Mauro does," the filmmaker says. "So, all through the film, you know only a little bit more than Mauro does, but not much."

After eight years, Lang's music remains characteristically introspective.

Just Like a Dream

K.D. Lang's newest offering is ethereally easy on the ears

MUSIC | Kathryn Dawn Lang has for more than 20 years remained one of country music's freshest voices. The 46-year-old Canadian opts for the subtle virtues of restraint on "Watershed," her first collection of new songs in nearly eight years, and inserts thoughtful substance into a carefully mannered, almost dreamy soundscape.

Lang synthesizes a sort of easy-listening roots sound atop which her voice is both versatile and steady, offering a slow blush of angst over plush strings on "Thread" and a supple caress that brings soft reassurance to the lustrous "Close Your Eyes." Her tone is the central appeal, whether she's navigating the smoldering celebration of desire on the breezy "Sunday" or the stark self-assessments grounding the shimmer of "Shadow and the Frame."

The twang of pedal steel guitar decorating the mellow "I Dream of Spring" is typical of the set's unobtrusive instrumentation, which never rises above a simmer on the delicate bossa nova of "Upstream" as Lang focuses on wringing lyrics in earthy fashion. The collection's mood is occasionally bleak, and her penchant for amusing vivacity never rears its head, but her introspection makes for pleasant listening in even the darkest of corners. WILL THERE BE GOLD? Daniel Day-Lewis won the best actor award at the British Academy Film Awards Sunday, cementing his place as an Oscar favorite for his role as an oilman in "There Will Be Blood." "Atonement" was named best picture.

Her Career Will Go On

Love her or hate her, Celine Dion has hit the ultra-big time

TOUR | Tommy Mottola remembers with crystal clarity the first time he witnessed Celine Dion in a recording studio.

"Being at the control board and hearing that voice come through the microphone, I thought, 'You've got to be kidding me,'" says Mottola, who, as Sony Music Entertainment chairman/CEO from 1988 to 2003, signed Dion to her English-language contract in 1989. "I had never heard that kind of pitch; it was bell clear and she could sing any style put in front of her. Celine had a perfect instrument. It was utterly thrilling — and it takes a lot to thrill me."

By that point, French Canadian Dion, at 21, was already a regional heroine in Quebec, with a dozen hit Francophone albums. She had also tasted international fame as top performer at the 1982 Yamaha World Popular Song Festival in Tokyo and winner of the 1988 Eurovision Song Contest in Dublin, singing in front of 600 million viewers.

But Dion realized that without command of English, her success was bound to be limited. She burned through a Berlitz course and arrived in New York, ready for the world. Sony teamed her with A-list producers David Foster and Chris Neil to record her 1990 debut English-language album, "Unison." Out of the gate, the team scored the top five "Where Does My Heart Beat Now" and was certified gold.

That marked the beginning of a new chapter that would ultimately propel Dion to unprecedented fame in every pocket of the world.

Now, following the release in December of her new Columbia Records album "Taking Chances," and in the wake of her record-setting, four and a half year residency at the Colosseum at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, Dion is taking her show on the road. Her worldwide tour opens Feb. 14 in Johannesburg.

"I'm amazed by the career I've had," Dion says. "We had a vision, a dream, and we believed. I wanted to share everything possible through music, lyrics, emotions. Time goes very fast. I can't even imagine all the things we have done."

When Irish Bells Are Singing

They're doing it in hopes that America will take real notice

INVASION | When the members of Irish rock troupe Bell X1 run out of time to chat with the press, fans and industry folks during their short American visits, they just invite everyone to join them for a pint at a local Irish pub.

Bell X1 has been ordering pints in this fashion a lot more frequently in advance of the Feb. 19 U.S. release of "Flock" via Yep Roc.

The album is Bell X1's first to be made available in the States, but is by no means the first impression the band has left here. Two songs were featured on "The OC" in 2005, including "Eve, the Apple of My Eye," which played during a much hullabalooed lesbian kiss scene. The group also toured the States in support of former bandmate and fellow Irishman Damien Rice.

"We've reached a tipping point with America," frontman Paul Noonan says. "We live in an online era where music is devalued, so doing shows and making the live experience more special is the place for us to win over new crowds." The group is planning a three-week North American tour that loops through a sold-out St. Patrick's Day show at New York's Bowery Ballroom, plus markets where it has never played previously, including Boston; Seattle; Washington, D.C.; Chicago; and Portland, Ore.

An in-demand live show has fueled the band back home. There, Bell X1 is behind only U2 when it comes to audience draw.

"When we dug into [signing the band] more and saw how they did in Ireland and how huge they were, it blew our minds even more," Yep Roc label manager Glenn Dicker says. "Our plan is very basic. It's focused on a grass-roots approach to building this up brick by brick over time." KATIE HASTY (BILLBOARD)

Roy Scheider Dies

Actor of 'Jaws' fame and Oscar nominee is dead at age 75

OBIT | Roy Scheider, a onetime boxer whose broken nose and pugnacious acting style made him a star in "The French Connection" and who later uttered one of cinematic history's most memorable lines in "Jaws," has died. He was 75.

Scheider died Sunday at the University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences hospital in Little Rock, hospital spokesman David Robinson said.

The hospital did not release a cause of death, but Scheider had been treated for multiple myeloma at the hospital's Myeloma Institute for Research and Therapy for the past two years.

Scheider earned two Academy Award nominations — a best-supporting nod for 1971's "The French Connection," in which he played the police partner of Oscar winner Gene Hackman, and a best-actor nomination for 1979's "All That Jazz," the semi-autobiographical Bob Fosse film.

But he was perhaps best known for his role as a small-town police chief in Steven Spielberg's 1975 film "Jaws," about a killer shark terrorizing beachgoers — as well as millions of moviegoers.

In 2005, one of Scheider's most famous lines in the movie — "You're gonna need a bigger boat" — was voted No. 35 on the American Film Institute's list of best quotes from U.S. movies.

Widely hailed as the film that launched the era of the Hollywood blockbuster, "Jaws" was the first movie to earn $100 million at the box office.

"I've been fortunate to do what I consider three landmark films," he said in 1986. "The French Connection" spawned a whole era of the relationship between two policemen, based on an enormous amount of truth about working on the job.

"Jaws" was the first big, blockbuster, outdoor-adventure film. And, certainly, 'All That Jazz' is not like any old MGM musical. Each one of these films is unique, and I consider myself fortunate to be associated with them."

Born into a working-class family in Orange, N.J., he was stricken with rheumatic fever at 6. He spent long periods in bed, becoming a voracious reader. Except for a slight heart murmur, he was pronounced cured at 17. He acquired the distinctive shape of his nose in an amateur boxing match.

After three years in the Air Force, Scheider sought a New York theater career in 1960. His debut came a year later as Mercutio in the New York Shakespeare Festival's production of "Romeo and Juliet." He also played minor roles in such films as "Paper Lion" and "Stiletto." Then he made a breakthrough in 1971 as Jane Fonda's pimp in "Klute."

"He was a wonderful guy. He was what I call 'a knock-around actor,'" Richard Dreyfuss, who co-starred with Scheider and Robert Shaw in "Jaws," told The Associated Press on Sunday. JILL ZEMAN (AP)

Battle for 'Jericho'

Angered fans see the fruits of their protest with show's return

REWARDS | The post-apocalyptic soap opera "Jericho" (10 p.m., CBS) returns for a second season that almost didn't happen.

When CBS announced its new schedule last May, the network had no room for "Jericho." But a persistent letter-writing campaign by fans convinced CBS to change its mind. A truncated second season will run on the network, while episodes from season one air Monday nights on Sci Fi.

CLIFF LIPSON/CBS

CLEANUP: Jake (Skeet Ulrich) and other townspeople rebuild Jericho.

Set in a tiny Kansas town that has survived a mysterious nuclear attack on many American cities, "Jericho" stars Skeet Ulrich as the estranged son who returns to his family on the eve of the catastrophe.

Despite its post-Sept. 11 atmosphere of paranoia and conspiracy, "Jericho" has an old-fashioned feel to it. With its border wars between rangers on horseback, it conjures images of a post-nuclear Western. And now, with the arrival of troops (including Esai Morales as Maj. Edward Beck) from a shadowy provisional government, the citizens of Jericho must decide whether they will be collaborators or insurgents. Gee, that's the same choice faced by those Colorado kids in "Red Dawn." KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE)

The National Portrait Gallery pays tribute to hip-hop artists

Legs crossed and fingers splayed, LL Cool J strikes the same regal pose seen in John D. Rockefeller's 1917 portrait — though he wears a ball cap.

LL Cool J and dozens of other hip-hop artists are being catapulted into the National Portrait Gallery with the likes of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. Some of the artists, including Ice T and Big Daddy Kane, are portrayed with the same power and royalty as kings and presidents long passed.

The new exhibit, "RECOGNIZE! Hip Hop and Contemporary Portraiture," will be on view through October. It's the first Smithsonian Institution exhibit to examine the influence of hip-hop music and style on American art and culture. The show, featuring four large graffiti murals and galleries with paintings, photography and video portraits, sits in contrast to the museum's nearby "American Origins" section, with portraits dating back to the 1600s.

The cable network VH1 originally commissioned the portrait of LL Cool J and others for the 2005 Hip Hop Honors. New York artist Kehinde Wiley took on the project and used his trademark style of having young, often anonymous black men select poses from old portraits of saints and monarchs, said curator Brandon Fortune.

"Basically, Kehinde Wiley takes a black man — a subject who had only been on the margins of historical grand portraiture — and puts that man squarely in the center of the tradition and gives that visual power to his anonymous subject," she said.

For the portrait of LL Cool J, the artist and subject chose the same pose as Rockefeller's portrait by John Singer Sargent. It's one portrait from the hip-hop collection the museum would like to acquire, curators said.

Several other paintings by Wiley — on loan for the exhibit — portray musicians Ice T, Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five and others.

The hip-hop exhibit is the third in a series called "Portraiture Now," which focuses on contemporary artists and new ways of producing portraits. The gallery plans to offer public programs, a family day and possible hip-hop performances linked to the show.

"This exhibition should not be seen as a comprehensive history of hip-hop from the 1970s to today, nor is it really a snapshot of hip-hop today," said Frank Goodyear, a curator who helped organize the exhibit. "What this exhibition is trying to do is recenter hip-hop as one of the key cultural achievements of the last 20 to 30 years."

Goodyear said the gallery didn't want to "whitewash" over the negative and sometimes violent stereotypes associated with hip-hop, but it still wanted to recognize the artists' positive influences.

Some have "tried to move hip-hop to the margins of our culture," he said. "But there's nothing marginal about hip hop at all. Hip-hop is at the center of our culture."

Do the Rights Thing

Costly construction leads teams to sell names of stadiums

With the cost of a new stadium now more than $1 billion, naming rights can be more important to sports franchises than bragging rights.

As several of the most storied franchises replace their stadiums, sports marketing experts expect corporations to pay record amounts for the right to name them.

And the teams are finding ways to make the big price tags worthwhile by maximizing the amount of exposure for a company's name and logo, even integrating it into the design of the building.

"There's more value to what's being offered," said Marc Ganis, president of SportsCorp Ltd., a Chicago sports marketing firm. Especially in the New York area, where several new stadiums are going up and garnering record deals, corporations are getting more exposure and visibility, he said.

The Nationals' new ballpark may not have a corporate name by opening day.

The New York Mets set a record when they sold naming rights to their new stadium to Citigroup Inc. for more than $400 million over 20 years.

Next up are the Chicago Cubs. The team's new owner, Sam Zell, says he wants revenue from historic Wrigley Field, which is named for a former owner and brings in no revenue to the team.

But the deal expected to set

The Giants' and Jets' stadium, which is due to open in 2010, is expected to cost $1.3 billion.

naming rights records is the new football stadium for the New York Giants and New York Jets in East Rutherford, N.J.

Ganis said the stadium would create a historic proposition: the most value ever offered, in the most expensive media market, and for two NFL franchises. He predicts the deal to go for at least $25 million to $30 million annually.

"The NFL is such a marketing juggernaut in the world of sports that there's just no other league that's close to it," Denver sports consultant Dean Bonham said. While he wouldn't estimate the amount, he predicted it would be a landmark deal.

Naming rights prices are escalating for several reasons: Public support to build stadiums is waning, player salaries are increasing and stadium construction costs are rising. Stadium costs are "out of control," Ganis said.

In 2002, the New England Patriots finished Gillette Stadium at a cost of $325 million. The Giants' and Jets' stadium, which is due to open in 2010, is expected to cost $1.3 billion, or 300 percent more.

David M. Carter, executive director of the Sports Business Institute at the University of Southern California, said recent deals are moving away from just advertising and branding. For example, the Oakland Athletics' new Cisco Field would use Cisco Systems Inc.'s technology to enhance ticketing, concessions and management of game-day operations.

Some teams hold out, however.

The Washington Nationals are still talking with potential candidates for a naming rights partner for their $631 million, publicly financed stadium, which opens this spring, said team president Stan Kasten.

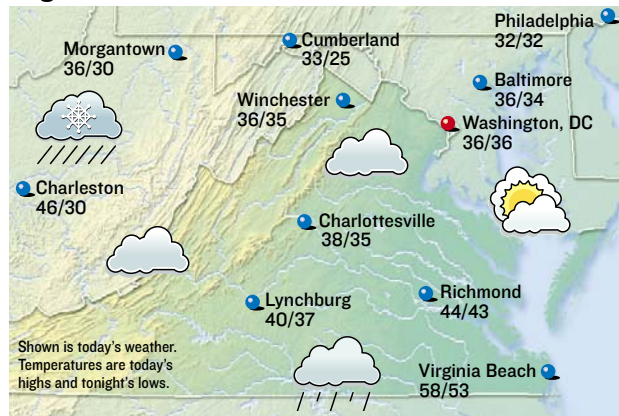

"I don't know if anything will be done by opening day," he said. "There's not a particular deadline. We want partner to be correct and deal to be correct."

LOOKING CLASSY: Accessories, which include lines like Mallary Marks and Renee Lewis, fill the first floor of the Barneys New York store that recently opened in Vegas.

Puttin' on the Glitz

Barneys New York makes a splash on the Vegas Strip

You know you're on the map as a great shopping city when Barneys New York opens its most decadent store in years on your main street.

The influential retailer, famous for its kooky window displays and mix of up-and-coming and established designers, has landed at the new Palazzo Las Vegas hotel and casino, boasting more than 80,000 square feet of men's and women's fashion, a collection of commissioned sculptures and decorative artworks, and quaint custom furnishings that evoke a kind of "Roman Holiday"/mid-century Italian glamour.

Despite its size, the store harks back to the company's first retail shop on West 17th Street in New York — which introduced Barneys' magical blend of exclusive boutique and swanky department store. The Las Vegas store is unmistakably Barneys: intimate and eccentric.

The store anchors the hyper-luxe resort's collection of high-end stores, the Shoppes at the Palazzo. The shops — which include other Vegas firsts such as Tory Burch, Diane von Furstenberg, Chloe, Anya Hindmarch and Lambertson Truex — will open over the next few months.

But proof of Barneys' top-of-the-heap status is everywhere. Though most of the boutiques are tucked into windowless wings of the casino, Barneys boasts its own expansive front window — and separate entrance — on the Strip. Signs pointing the way to the hip fashion emporium are visible from virtually every poker table and slot machine. The Palazzo's developer, the Las Vegas Sands Corp., even extended the gondola-filled Grande Canal in the neighboring Venetian shops up to the new store.

Despite the glitz overload, Barneys was careful to keep its aesthetics decidedly non-Vegas — striving for a slightly amped-up version of itself (meaning playful mannequin vignettes, free-standing art pieces and custom furnishings).

"We had to make sure we pumped up the volume in terms of design," said David New, executive vice president of creative services, "make it bigger, splashier and bolder than our stores in Boston or even Dallas."

Creative director Simon Doonan is quick to point out that boldness of design doesn't equal mindless decadence. "It's not that chinchilla bed-spread glamour," he said. "We didn't do anything goofy like gold faucets. It's really like a hotel in Capri that's never been renovated."

The work of decorative artist John-Paul Philippe, a longtime Barneys collaborator, defines the store's aesthetic. Philippe's designs swath everything from the glass-and-paper base of the cosmetics cases to the sculptural ceiling borders to the massive windows overlooking the Strip. There are sections of backlit glass illuminating paper shapes in sunburst hues, window panes covered in a subtle roulette-table graphic and hanging mixed-metal objects soldered into sun-and-rays shapes.

But Philippe's pieces aren't the only works of supreme quirk in the store: There's a giraffe made entirely of jeans and a sculpture of a horse rendered in heavy silver coat hangers.

Doing Lines

"Indulgent" and "eyeliner" aren't usually used in the same sentence. But painting on Laura Mercier's limited-edition BRILLIANT EYE LINER ($22, lauramercier.com) feels like you're spoiling yourself. Applied with a fine-point brush, the inky liquid seems to melt onto the lash line. Don't worry about shaky hands—it sweeps easily across the eyelid. We tried the regal gold; it also comes in black, blue and purple. Just don't confuse the bottles with your art supplies—though you could probably render a credible landscape with what's inside. Skin Care

Bizarro World Beauty

SEPHORA FACESOOTHING CLEANSING CREAM for dry skin ($10, Sephora) is an excellent product — despite itself. Most dry-skin face washes work without stripping the face of its natural oils, leaving skin soft (and/or greasy). This does not do that. In fact, it's a bit abrasive — not soothing. Which is what someone with dry skin can really use — a gentle-ish cleanser that sloughs away the dead, parched cells dulling one's complexion. The equally backward EXFOLIATOR & MASK for dry skin ($12) wasn't abrasive in the slightest, apparently working through the "massaging action" it demands of the user. HOLLY J. MORRIS (EXPRESS)

Grammy Awards

Washington Post music critic J. FREEDOM DU LAC was online Monday and explained why Amy Winehouse is cool, summed up Kanye's appeal, and had a suggestion for Beyonce and Tina.

What is the Grammys' fixation with Alicia Keys? Is she their official mascot or something?

Funny: I was talking with a friend at a post-game dinner last night and we were wondering the same thing. Seems like Alicia gets two or three slots every year. I think it basically boils down to this: Clive Davis owns this town.

Help me to understand why Amy Winehouse cleaned up. She is talented, but her sound is right out of the '60s.

Plain and simple: The music is great, and it's struck a chord with people. Retro? Yeah. But that's not a bad thing, is it? A lot of great music reaches into the past.

Beyonce should wear a dress, or pants, at all times!

That's the minority opinion, I think. I was surprised that Tina didn't want to engage in a leg-off, though. Even though she's a multiple of Beyonce's age, she just might win.

Is it wrong for me to want Kanye to lose so I can see how P-O'd he'll get? I don't think you're the only one, really. He's the crybaby everybody loves to hate.

What has happened to the Grammy Awards? I can remember my siblings and I sitting in front of the TV for all the excitement of the show.

Those days are long gone.

There are so many televised awards shows that the Grammys have become something like a face in the, um, very crowded crowd.

GOT ISSUES? DR. ANDREA BONIOR WILL HELP YOU SORT THEM OUT

99 Bottles of Wine on the Wall ... 98 ... 97

Q I am worried about my husband's drinking. We both enjoy wine and fine dining, but he seems to have lost control. If I don't hide all the wine but the bottle we're drinking that night, he'll drink several more after I go to sleep (sometimes this is coupled with binge eating). I've tried asking him to leave one glass of wine at the bottom of the bottle or to leave the second bottle untouched, but he's never succeeded in these tests of will. The upside is that he only drinks like this at home. He's also been on sleeping pills for as long as I've known him (without the supervision of a doctor). I was waking up at night to make sure he was still breathing pre-Heath Ledger; now I'm a total wreck. How do I help him? — NO NAME

Unlike any quips I can come up with about Goldschläger, this is quite serious stuff. Any kind of prescription medication (especially sleeping pills and those that aren't supervised by a doctor) combined with alcohol can be real cause for concern. The first thing to do is be honest about your role in this. Substance abuse and dependence are not about strength of character, so the "tests of will" have to stop, as they seem to be taking the role of enabling — and endangering — your husband.

"What, you've never seen a guy drinking two bottles of Merlot out of a baseball helmet before?"

It might also be that your accumulation of bottles — which seems to rival a vineyard — might have to be curbed, at least temporarily, while you and your husband assess the situation. It's quite possible he has a problem, and there's a chance it might involve abstinence from alcohol as a treatment. He needs a thorough physical and a discussion about the sleeping pills with a doctor you trust — call in advance to express your concerns. And most likely he needs counseling to determine why his anxiety has gotten so out of control, and to find ways to cope outside of booze, binges and pill bottles. If you can't get him to agree to seek help, you must keep trying, and get some support yourself. Al-Anon (Al-anon.org) is a great place to start.

'I Hate Her! So I'll Talk About Her Even More'

Q Is it a bad sign if your new boyfriend talks about his ex all the time? It's always bad stuff, so it's not like he wants her back, but I'm starting to think that he's obsessed with the past.

— CONCERNED

It's not the greatest of signs if your new boyfriend talks about anything all the time, whether it be his ex, Christina Aguilera or what the proper name is for those sticks that separate groceries at the checkout counter.

"Substance abuse and dependence are not about strength of character."

Bad-mouthing one's ex and ruminating about it don't bode well for his having come to terms with that relationship, no matter how it ended. Maybe it's nervousness, or it's a topic that he mistakenly thinks you find entertaining. Next time he launches into such a soliloquy, you might gently comment, "I feel like you talk about Sheila quite a lot — but I'm more interested in looking forward than dwelling on the past." If he doesn't take the hint, that bad sign just got a good bit worse.

CHOP TO IT

"Techniques of Healthy Cooking" ($65, Wiley) was penned for chefs by the Culinary Institute of America, but you don't need a white coat to appreciate the compendium of advice on everything from buying legumes to roasting fruits. Did we mention the 400-plus recipes?

FOR HEAD CASES

Donning a Halo Rejuvenator ($30, Halorejuvenator.com) makes anyone look like a samurai. But you're fighting off only your own pain. The idea is that the weighted head band signals the spine to lengthen and straighten, thus curing your woes.

TOASTER POINTS

Pop-Tarts Toaster Pastries with One Serving of Whole Grain ($2) look like their less-healthy cousins with a tan. (That's the glow of 16 grams of whole grains.) They may be delicious, but high-fructose corn syrup means they're devilish, too.

OUCHY BLASTER

Preparedness enthusiasts can add sprayable Neosporin ($6.50, drug-stores) to their key ring, next to the mace, whistle and flashlight. The fine, unscented Neo to Go mist bears no resemblance to the goopy anti-bacterial ointment sharing its name.

GUINEA PIG

A Feet Feat

■ On a recent trip to California, a yoga teacher told this tester she had "remarkably unopen toes." She dismissed this as New Age nonsense. Then she tried YogaToes ($50, Yogapro.com). When inserted between the tootsies, the squishy plastic doohickies are supposed to stretch, strengthen and align muscles. Though our tester initially found the gummy bear-textured things difficult to wedge between her digits, dipping them in warm water (as the packaging recommends) helped. The idea? Wear YogaToes for a few minutes each day, which the company claims will eventually reduce foot pain caused by exercise, age or stiletto wearing. The first few times, our high-heel-loving tester found the forced duck-footed feeling uncomfortable. After two weeks, though, her nightly foot cramps had vanished — no run ins with yogis required.

THE MISFITS

Scared to Sweat

Q I already know the answer: Go see a shrink. Problem: I hate to exercise in public. I don't have agoraphobia, but I absolutely hate to pass by people's houses. The other half of this problem: Exercising at home is so dull, and the TV and fridge are sitting right over there. If I could wear a bag over my head, assuring that no one knew who I was, I could walk in public. If I could dance to my favorite music at home, I would. I think the answer might be getting a good sound system and some Beach Boys CDs. And a shrink?

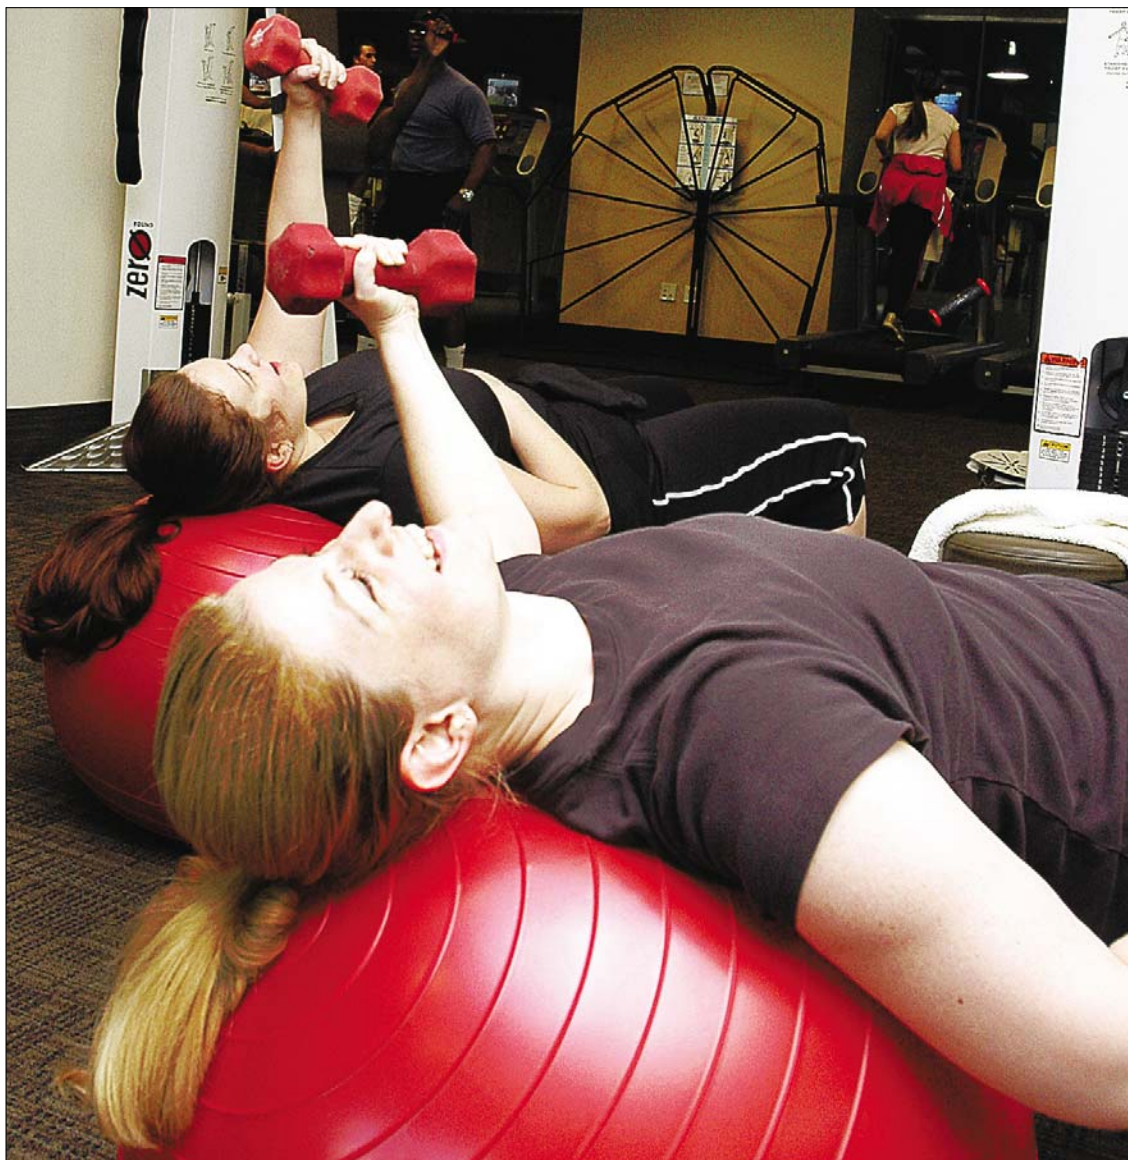

— ANONYMOUS

■ Not that there's anything wrong with the Beach Boys solution, but I'm not getting good vibrations that you'll stick with an exercise program that consists entirely of pretend surfing in your living room. Plus, that TV and fridge probably aren't going anywhere.

So, yeah, I talked to a shrink—well, sort of: Mark Anshel, a professor of sport and exercise psychology at Middle Tennessee State University. People who talk as you do are usually self-conscious about their bodies and how others view them, he says. The mind-set is rampant among middle-age participants in Anshel's campus wellness program. "There is a hesitancy among the faculty to use a facility used by people half their age," he explains. "It can be really debilitating."

His solution for them might work for you, too. It starts with developing a workout routine. "Know what you're going to do, have a sequence, a start time and a finish time," he says. Then, bulk up your social support by exercising with a friend or a coach. That should help keep your mind focused on the task at hand rather than on what that skinny ninny on the treadmill is thinking about you ("Although there's a high likelihood that no one is thinking anything about you," he adds). If those methods don't make public exercise easier, Anshel urges you to get professional counseling.

TWO FOR THE MONEY: Cloutier, front, and McCoy work out together and each save $20 on one-on-one training sessions.

Do Some Pair Bonding

Training in twos is easier on the purse but just as tough on the pecs

"Your hair is naturally so curly," comments Allison McCoy as she extends her leg, lifting a weight attached to a pulley. "It has a mind of its own," agrees Lori Cloutier, squatting with her back on a stability ball. Although these former grad school pals could do such girl-talking over happy-hour cocktails, they've brought their bonding to the Sports Club/LA in Foggy Bottom for partner training, a twist on the typical one-on-one model.

By splitting the cost, it's a cheaper proposition. By having a gabbing buddy, it's a more entertaining one, too. "It's like having a play hour away from the rest of the world," describes Kevin Swann, wellness director of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase YMCA. Plus, it ups the accountability factor (McCoy, 29, admits she's "less likely to cancel if it'll ruin two people's days.") and can make members work harder than they would on their own. "If we're struggling, we can laugh at each other. I can play off her energy," adds Cloutier, 32.

Although that pair is on par physically, difference in ability isn't as much of an issue as one might expect. "No two people are ever the same," explains Karen Krieg, a trainer with the Bethesda Sport & Health. "They have different needs, weaknesses, strengths, corrections," she says. With a heavier weight here and a position shift there, she can keep almost any pair in sync.

Nevertheless, it's easier on the trainer if the pair is evenly matched, which is why the YMCA encourages folks to sign up for partner training as free agents. "We do a screening to find common things, so we end up putting people who are total strangers together," says trainer Terrill Jeffries of the Alexandria branch. One recent success story: two women, both lawyers, about the same age, with a similar fitness level. Such commonalities all help, he says, but the biggest factor is the same level of motivation.

“If we're struggling, we can laugh at each other.”

There is a downside to team training, though: Type A's have a tendency to treat it more like a duel than a duet. And anyone accustomed to 100 percent of a trainer's attention may feel neglected. "You can't need to be the center of the universe," says Krieg.

Cloutier and McCoy's train-

DON'T BRING LOVE

→ It may sound cute, but couples are notorious for being bad training partners. Marco Orellana of the YMCA B-CC even refuses to take them: "They're always competing instead of exercising." Any other combo is preferable—colleagues, classmates, neighbors or even strangers, he says.

That said, a few couples CAN survive the sweat test. For Paul and Peggy Young, who recently started partner training at the Bethesda Sport & Health, it's never been a contest. "She has better balance than I do. It doesn't bother me," Paul Young says. But before you risk your relationship, realize that the Youngs have been married for 46 years.

er, Monica Pampell, has certain moves she'll have her doubles do simultaneously (like ab work), but mostly they switch off between two exercises to make sure both stay in constant motion. "I usually have one exercise I know will be more challenging, and I can stay with that person," says Pampell.

But no one's likely to feel abandoned, because there are also plenty of exercises partners can do together. Swann suggests standing back to back and passing a medicine ball around in a circle, or tag-teaming through an obstacle course. Krieg has her pairs play tug-of-war with a resistance band, or she'll declare "Core War"—each stands on a Bosu trying to knock the other off. "It's almost like 'American Gladiators,'" she says.

Pampell has McCoy and Cloutier cool down with a partner bit called the "squat toss." One throws a medicine ball to the other, who squats and rolls it back. To this pair, it's a game. Even when an overzealous toss hits Cloutier's chest with a thump, the women are all smiles—until it's time to hit the showers. "The hour goes so fast," Cloutier says. But in two weeks, they'll clink water bottles again. VICKY HALLETT (EXPRESS)

EATING IN

Light Macaroni And Cheese

TIME: 1 HR., 10 MIN., SERVES 4

INGREDIENTS

- 8 ounces whole-grain elbow macaroni
- 1 tablespoon all-purpose flour
- 1 cup fat-free milk (divided)
- 1 cup grated extra-sharp cheddar cheese
- 2 teaspoons Dijon mustard
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- 1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
- 1/8 teaspoon ground ancho chili pepper
- 1 1/2 cups 2 percent cottage cheese
- 3 tablespoons unseasoned bread crumbs
- 1 teaspoon extra-virgin olive oil
- 3 tablespoons grated Parmesan

BRING A LARGE SAUCEPAN of lightly salted water to a boil. Add the macaroni and cook according to package instructions. Drain and rinse with cold water, then set aside.

Meanwhile, in a small bowl, whisk together flour and 2 tablespoons of the milk. In a large saucepan, heat the remaining milk over medium heat until steaming.

Gradually whisk a few tablespoons of the hot milk into the milk-flour mixture, then whisk this mixture back into the saucepan. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until the sauce is smooth and slightly thickened, 1 minute.

Remove the sauce from the heat and stir in cheddar cheese, mustard, salt, black pepper, ancho chili pepper and nutmeg. Set aside.

In a food processor or blender, puree the cottage cheese until very smooth. Stir into the sauce. Stir in the cooked macaroni and spoon the mixture into the prepared baking dish.

In a small bowl, stir together bread crumbs and olive oil until well blended. Stir in the Parmesan and sprinkle the mixture over the macaroni and cheese. Bake for 40 to 45 minutes, or until browned on top and bubbling. (AP)

Eight for Your Mate's Plate

These succulent love bites are a welcome addition to a V-Day menu

Sex-starved humans have been hunting get-in-the-mood grub for millennia. Romans slurped shellfish while splashing around public baths, and the Marquis de Sade downed untold quantities of Spanish fly as he boinked his way through 18th-century France. Of course, finding libido boosters with scientifically proven positive effects is a different story (oysters, yes; Spanish fly, no). We tracked down foods that will increase hormone levels and get your blood pumping — just in time for Valentine's Day fun.

Bananas

→ If you want sex to go the extra mile, fuel up for foreplay just as you would for a marathon. A banana is the perfect food for bedroom endurance: Bananas contain B vitamins, which are key for converting carbohydrates into energy and are believed to help manufacture sex hormones such as testosterone.

Celery

→ Serve your guy celery sticks and he may suddenly seem more irresistible than Leonardo DiCaprio. "Raw celery contains the male hormone androsterone, which can act as a pheromone to trigger female attraction," says Ava Cadell, author of "Passion Power." After a few bites, his sweat glands start releasing the pheromone. If you're feeling too cranky to fool around, nibble a stalk yourself — androsterone has mood-elevating effects in women, according to the Journal of Fertility and Sterility.

Dark Chocolate

→ A recent Italian study found that women who reported eating chocolate on a daily basis claimed to have more satisfying sex lives. Coincidence? We think not. Like other sweets, chocolate triggers the release of feel-good endorphins. It also provides small amounts of anxiety-quelling trypt-tophan, arousing caffeine, and a few substances that, in large quantities, work like a psychedelic drug and an opiate, respectively.

Flaxseeds

→ Just 1 tablespoon of flaxseeds per day helps increase testosterone — the chemical with the most direct libido-boosting effect. Besides enhancing sex drive, these nutty-flavored seeds contain essential fatty acids, including omega-3 and omega-6, which are the major building blocks of all sex hormones.

Ginger

→ Wondering what to cook on Feb. 14? Make it an Asian stir-fry with loads of fresh ginger. The powerful root stimulates the circulatory system, increasing blood flow to the genitals.

Honey

→ No wonder newlyweds' sweaty getaways are called honeymoons. The sticky sweetener contains simple carbohydrates that provide instant energy and fuel for working muscles.

Nutmeg & Clove

→ Researchers have found that nutmeg and clove bolster the sexual activity of rats. Each stimulates the parasympathetic nervous system — helping the little critters, and you, relax — but the effects were greater with nutmeg.

Oysters

→ Ancient Romans pegged this shellfish as a sex-spurring food, and they were definitely onto something. Oysters contain high levels of zinc, a mineral required for the production of testosterone. A team of American and Italian researchers recently found that mussels, clams and oysters deliver two types of amino acids that spark a rush of sex hormones.
